

I am commenting on an FCC proposal to institute a national no-call list. The State of Indiana started a no-call list earlier this year, and the number of telemarketing calls we have received has decreased dramatically. I support stringent regulation of telemarketing, including a strict no-call list. I pay for my telephone service because it is a convenience for me -- I intend it to be used by those I would like to contact me. Repeated calls from businesses who are trying to sell me something, even if they claim it is only a courtesy call, are an unwelcome intrusion into my home.
